

Macy's Toy Exposition

Occupies the Sixth Floor

Again the world—our world—responds to the bright, glad, caressing spirit of Christmas. The sweet emotions it inspires are sincere—universal. Other legends may dim and fade, but the traditions that cluster about the white, bright brow of Santa Claus will thrill the heart of humanity as long as little children live to love and be loved.

Macy's responds to the sentiment of the day. The festival spirit is supreme. Grandmothers, aroused by the joyous babble of the little ones, will glow again as they come here to buy Dolls and Toys for their children's children, and they will catch the spirit of happiness and feel once more the tingling delight that 53 years ago stirred their own souls, when their mothers smuggled in the mysterious bundles that came from Macy's. Happiness like history repeats itself.

55,000 square feet devoted to the greatest exhibition of Toys in the history of Macy's. Plenty of room for all to see and buy in comfort. Come soon and come often, and bring the children with you.

OLD GUARD OBSERVES BRITISH DEPARTURE

87th Evacuation Day Parade by Subway and Elevated—And Some Afoot.

ABSENT REVIEW BY MAYOR

Feast in Antique Tavern and Armory Reminiscences Fill Out Busy Day.

The Old Guard was out to celebrate Evacuation day yesterday. The evacuation, as everybody knows, began on the 25th of November, 1783, when the British went peevishly down to the Battery to embark for a warmer climate. But the Old Guard never surrenders its right to celebrate anything and has been repeating the Evacuation day ceremonies for eighty-seven years, retaining nearly all the customs inaugurated in the beginning. The veterans were swathed to the eyes in full dress winter uniforms, consisting of bearskin shakos and long blue frock coats. They mobilized at noon at the headquarters in New York City, and moved on mass upon the Fifth street subway station, whence they made for downtown with all the grim determination of might. They had 129 years ago. They detained at City Hall, and after silently saluting the windows of Mayor Gaynor's office marched down Broadway to the old time tunes played by the Old Guard band. The Battery once gained the Guard marched right up to the flag pole which marks one of the old Guardmen, who and the Americans had such a discussion before the Stars and Stripes were finally hoisted aloft. And seldom has there been a more martial scene there, it is safe to say. For were there not six batteries from Governors Island standing at attention? And did they not make a salute of twenty-one guns when Capt. George W. Homans and George L. Winn hoisted the flag to the top of the pole? Most certainly! Since they had used the subway to get downtown, the Old Guardmen, who make a practice of patronizing home industries impartially, took an elevated train uptown. It descended at Twenty-eighth street and traveled Fifth avenue to a sight of 100 persons observing an old custom. At Forty-eighth street the marching veterans sidestepped over to Broadway and burst into the portals of the Folies Bergere restaurant and in this conservative colored hostelry disposed themselves about small tables. Everything was most antique about the menu of the luncheon which followed, even the wines, of which there was a generous quantity, for brave throats parched with the exhausting day's march. After Major S. Ellis Briggs had said a few words about everybody wanting to be sure and come to the Old Guard hall in Madison Square Garden on January 13 and bring a great many people with them, the "old boys" got themselves over to headquarters, there to pass the remainder of the day and night reminiscing.

D. A. R. AND GUESTS CELEBRATE

Patriotic Luncheon With a Bit of Suffragism Also.
In celebration of the evacuation of New York by the British after the Revolutionary War, the New York State Daughters of the Revolution held their fifteenth commemorative luncheon in the Astor dining room of the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday. Besides about a hundred members of the local chapter there were representatives from many sister chapters. Mrs. Harriette M. Johnson-Wood was toastmistress. The room was hung with American flags and colonial tapestry and decorated with "Continental" buff and blue. Following the luncheon there were readings, responses to various patriotic toasts and music. Mrs. Johnson-Wood reminded the Daughters that they still had a war to fight, though a bloodless one, for suffrage.

TWO CLAIM FOX AS HUSBAND.

Widows Are Fighting to Administer Suicide's Estate.

Unusual affidavits were submitted in the Surrogate's office yesterday in a contest by two women for the estate of the man they say was her lawful husband. One admits that her husband got a divorce but says she never served with papers and that her husband continued to live with her after he got the decree. She says that the mother of the other wife also posed as a wife of the same man. The affidavits were filed in behalf of Mrs. Martha Fox of 121 East 109th street, who asks for letters of administration on the estate of Harris C. Fox and that an application for letters already made by Mrs. Lillian Fox of 385 Fort Washington avenue be denied. Fox, who was designer for a Philadelphia women's fashion house, committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid at his Fort Washington avenue apartment on November 10. In her previous application Mrs. Lillian Fox said she is the widow and that her husband left an estate of only $800. Mrs. Martha Fox alleges in her petition that Fox left over $6,000 and says that she and two children, Delia and Morton Fox, are the only legal heirs. She said that a decree of divorce was obtained by her husband in Kings county in January, 1911, in a suit of Harris C. Fox against Mary Fox, but she didn't learn of it until after Fox's death. Mrs. Fox married the decedent on May 30, 1890. Sixteen years ago he met a Mrs. Victoria Grossman, who owned a liquor store at 34 Delancey street. She was the mother of Mrs. Lillian C. Fox who now claims to be the legal wife of Fox. The petitioner said that after her husband met Mrs. Grossman he lived with her as her husband, and came home only once a week. Mrs. Fox said she refrained from instituting any action against him in order to shield herself and her children. Mrs. Grossman died in July, 1909, leaving a daughter, Lillian, 21 years old, and Mrs. Fox says her husband then took Lillian as his wife, and married her after he had obtained his decree in Brooklyn. The Surrogate will decide the case to-day.
